

What leads to suicide?

No One Takes Their Life for a Single Reason

Suicide most often occurs when stressors and health issues converge to create an experience of hopelessness and despair. Depression is the most common condition associated with suicide, and it is often undiagnosed or untreated.

Most people who actively manage their mental health conditions go on to engage in life. Conditions like depression, anxiety and substance use problems, especially when unaddressed, increase risk for suicide.

Assume You're the Only One Who Will Reach Out

If You're Concerned About Someone

Talk in Private

Listen to their story, and let them know you care. Ask directly about suicide, calmly and without judgement. Show understanding and take their concerns seriously. Let them know their life matters to you. That one conversation could save a life.

Avoid

- x Debating the value of life
- x Advice to fix it
- x Minimizing the person's feelings

If a Person Says They Are Thinking About Suicide

Take the Person Seriously

Someone considering suicide is experiencing a life-threatening health crisis and may not believe they can be helped. Work with them to keep them safely away from lethal means like firearms and drugs and remind them that their suffering is temporary.

Do not leave them alone and call or text 988 for the Suicide & Crisis Lifeline.

Be sure to follow up with them after the crisis to see how they're doing.

If You're Struggling

Don't Wait for Someone to Reach Out

Seek mental health treatment, or tell your clinician about your suicidal thinking.

Treat yourself like you would treat someone else who needs your help.
